8 Reasonable Modifications.

From time to time, and upon request by Registered Users, reasonable modifications or changes to specific areas of the Product(s) may be performed. Such modifications must align with the intended operation, functionality, and scope of the Product(s).

Each requested modification will be assessed individually, and an appropriate time frame will be allocated for its implementation. Support Engineers will use commercially reasonable efforts to complete the modifications within the agreed timeline.

Modifications are deemed "reasonable" when they:

- Do not materially alter or expand the core functionality or purpose of the Product(s);
- Do not constitute the development of entirely new features, modules, or integrations.
- Are feasible within existing technical and architectural constraints.
- Are consistent with the Product's roadmap and operational standards.
- Support improved performance, usability, compliance, or security.

Reasonable modifications are provided at no additional cost to the Registered User.

9. Custom Features and Chargeable Development

Requests from Registered Users that fall outside the scope of reasonable modifications — including but not limited to the development of new features, modules, third-party integrations, or significant architectural changes — will be treated as custom feature requests.

Custom feature development:

- Is not included in the standard service offering.
- Will be considered at the Company's discretion.
- Requires a formal review process to define scope and feasibility.

Custom development is subject to additional fees, which will be communicated and agreed upon prior to commencement of any work.
